

Crash Course In Advice

(NAPSA)—If you're like the average driver, you'll be involved in an auto accident once every seven to 10 years—and now you can get help dealing with it.

Many people don't know what to do when it comes to collision repair. To help, a group of car parts manufacturers known as the OEM Roundtable launched a useful website.

It provides information that can help people make informed decisions about collision repair, regardless of what vehicle they own, including Audi, Chrysler, Dodge, Fiat, Jeep, Ram, SRT, Ford, Lincoln, Chevrolet, Buick, Cadillac, GMC, Honda, Acura, Hyundai, Mazda, Nissan, Infiniti, Toyota, Lexus, Scion, Volkswagen and Volvo.

Having your vehicle damaged and dealing with a body shop, insurance companies and a car rental company can be a confusing and stressful time. The site, www.crashrepairinfo.com, offers tips on choosing the right body shop, common collision and insurance terms and other helpful information. Many people who have used it are telling friends and family about the site on social media.
