

Facial Products Developed Out Of Necessity

(NAPSA)—In 1978, a devastating facial cancer nearly took the life of Francine Jansen. The melanoma attacked her sinuses, barely bypassing facial nerves. Her recovery was slow and her skin was extremely sensitive.

"I tried natural remedies, like baking soda and honey, to promote the natural healing process," she explains. "When I added an English product to my mixture, I discovered something that quickly facilitated healing my scars."

After contacting European and U.S. companies, Ms. Jansen spent the next several years developing a proprietary formula, with the assistance of chemist Dr. John Walls. Eventually, she managed to turn her research into a line of beauty products made with natural ingredients. Called Face of the Sea, the products feature a naturally-occurring ocean mineral as the primary ingredient.

"Most exfoliants contain damaging acids which can cause devastating side effects," says Ms. Jansen. "My Exfoliating Cleansing Mask absorbs the skin's dead protein. It is pure, non-toxic, pH balanced and mild enough to use every day. The formula is effective against wrinkles and blemishes, and my products have never been tested on animals."

Ms. Jansen has collected testimonials from people who have tried the mask on everything from cradle cap (an inflammation of the scalp which occurs in infants) to burns to baldness. All claim astonishing results.

While treating her own skin, Francine Jansen came up with an all-natural cleaning formula based on an ocean mineral.

"In dealing with Ms. Jansen, I am of the opinion that Face of the Sea products are 100 percent user-friendly by containing only the purest natural ingredients available," says Dr. Walls.

Ms. Jansen recently added an Exfoliating Cleansing Crème, which moisturizes as it cleans, to the line. Other available products include moisturizers, eye makeup remover and a shower-and-bath splash.

To learn more, or to order products, call 1-800-327-4707 or visit the Face of the Sea Web site at www.facefitness.com.