A Remarkable Woman's Survival Story

(NAPSA)—It's been said that the things that don't kill you make you stronger, and that has certainly been the case with Celina, the main character in a book titled "15 Minutes to Live."

Cecelia G. Davis

Celina has had so many near-death experiences in which she was saved by her two guardian angels that she no longer fears death.

From snakebites to surgical complications, Celina seems to survive when others around her die young. She figures that the Almighty must have a plan for her.

Celina finds a way to successfully cope with her health problems and decides to write a book to share what she has learned. The incredible close calls she survived would have killed a lesser person but they have not diminished her faith.

The inspiring book was written by Cecelia Davis, a teacher whose previous books include "Quest for the Perfect World." Her new book, "15 Minutes to Live," is the story of her life—a life in which she has survived nine close encounters with death.

Davis has overcome more than repeated close encounters with death. She was raised in a home she describes as driven by hate and violence. At a very young age, she learned how to survive her terror-filled home life through meditation and imagination.

Davis had to quit high school to care for her arthritic mother, but after she married and had three children she went back to school and earned her high school diploma while working a full-time job, shift work, in a glass factory.

She graduated college with a

B+ average and a degree in education. She taught school, then managed the three-part family business, K&M Diesel Services. When the business failed, the family lost everything but Davis did not give up.

She studied for a real estate license, worked as a substitute teacher and today teaches at a community college.

In her spare time, she upgrades and builds new computers, writes poetry and is completing her fifth book "The Death of a World" (for 2008). In 2009 she will publish Volume II of "Quest for the Perfect World."

She describes her new book as offering spiritual help and food for the soul.
