

Ten Classics To Read

(NAPSA)—Some literary masterpieces deserve to be read again—especially when you have years of experience to relate them to. That’s why many adults take the time to revisit the classics they first read in school.

To turn an important page in reinroducing the classics, a group of CliffNotes editors compiled a list of 10 titles that every adult should read. They are “Hamlet,” “War and Peace,” “Walden,” “A Tale of Two Cities,” “The Sun Also Rises,” “The Sound and the Fury,” “Moby Dick,” “Beloved,” “The Iliad,” and “Atlas Shrugged.”

These titles work well for book discussion groups or solitary reading. If you want more insight on any of these books, you can visit CliffsNotes.com and view the CliffNotes version of your book for free. If you want to print a copy to mark up, you can download a printable file for $5.99.

CliffNotes provide concise yet thorough introductions to the novels and profile the authors, highlighting personal background, social and cultural influences and career triumphs. The notes highlight major characters and explain their actions, motivations and relationships with each other. Readers can benefit from the insight of teachers, writers and editors who have studied, taught and analyzed the classics.
