Getting A Handle On High-Tech Gadgets

(NAPSA)—If you're stumped when it comes time to program the digital video recorder, and your PDA still doubles as a paper weight, a new book may help you change all that.

A new book may help you become more comfortable with consumer technology.

The book explains how to use and get the most out of the high-tech gadgets that are becoming part of everyday life, such as digital cameras, GPS devices and satellite radio.

Written by business and technology consultant Nick Evans, the book focuses on 50 "hot" technologies and offers a step-by-step explanation of how to use them so they can simplify our lives.

Consumer Gadgets: 50 Ways to Have Fun and Simplify Your Life with Today's Technology....and Tomorrow's (Financial Times Prentice Hall) explores the benefits behind some of today's most popular gadgets and offers a glimpse into technology's future.

The book, which makes a great gift, can be found at Barnes & Noble, Borders and Amazon.com.
