

(NAPSA)—If you've ever wondered how people who love movies talk about the movies they love, you may want to pick up a copy of the delightfully droll, The 247 Best Movie Scenes In Film History (McFarland, $20 paperback).

The 247 Best Movie Scenes in Film History

Public Enemy set the standard by which all food mushing scenes are judged.

To make things easier, author Sanford Levine has arranged his book in sections that include best cigar scenes, whistling scenes, dentist scenes, haircut scenes, steambath scenes, parking meter scenes and so on.

In one of Levine's best dentist scenes (in the film, 10) he remarks that dentist scene fans were disappointed with director Blake Edwards for changing the title of this movie about a man's yen for a dentist's daughter from 5 to 10. According to Levine, the movie was originally called 5 because that was how many fillings Dudley Moore had to get in order to get Bo Derek's honeymoon address.

Reviews have ranged from "Ingenious"—American Cinematographer to "It's a hoot"— Clive Hirschhorn, Sunday Express to "Wildly quixotic"—Films in Review.

247 Best is available in bookstores, from www.amazon.com or from McFarland at 800-253-2187.