

Auto Careers Fuel Market

(NAPSA)—What will drive your career well into the future? If you're like thousands of Americans, the answer is a car.

The U.S. Department of Labor identified auto retailing as a high-growth industry, and nearly 109,000 career jobs are available at U.S. auto dealerships, according to a new study by Automotive Retailing Today (ART).

There are nearly 109,000 career jobs currently available at auto dealerships across the country.

The approximate vacancies by job function include:

45,698

Sales

36,456

Service

7,695

Collision Repair

6,491

Parts

5,159

Dealership Administration

7,315

Other (porters, car washers, detailers, receptionists)

Drive To Succeed—Nearly 109,000 career jobs are available at U.S. auto dealerships.

The jobs, which include positions in sales, service, collision repair, parts, and dealership administration, are highlighted on the group's Web site at www.autocareerstoday.org.

The site lists more than 40 career opportunities available in today's new-car dealerships. Plus it highlights information on education and training (many of today's cars are practically rolling computers), and you can even learn about salaries in the field.
