Tips On How To Vacation In Comfort

(NAPSA)—For most families, warm weather means fun time, as kids are trading classrooms for campouts, buses for bikes and math lessons for swimming lessons. It's also the season for family travel—which presents parents with some unique challenges. No matter where you're going, travel expert and mom Emily Kaufman has tips to help every family getaway be what it should be: fun.

Don't Stress

Approach your travel plans with confidence and realism. Be prepared and flexible; there are some things you can't control, such as traffic or delays. When your kids see your confidence, they'll feel safe and can be calm. In case you get stranded in a traffic jam or an airport, pack "boredom bags"—bags filled with age-appropriate toys (books, electronic games, cards) and snacks to appease (and distract) the kids.

Travel Wear Is Not Your Kids' "Sunday Best"

To ensure a fun start to your trips, start with comfort—a comfortable family is a happy family. Encourage your kids to layer up with tees and hoodies so they're ready for any temperature, from air-conditioned airports to the car's burning backseat.

so before arriving, decide on "must-do" adventures: Visit the Rock 'n Roll Coaster® presented by Hanes or experience Expedition Everest™, but also leave time for discovery and surprises; these make the best memories. Kaufman's favorite insider tip: Disney's FASTPASS® to avoid waiting at popular attractions in all four theme parks. Take a ticket with an assigned return time and experience the attraction later in the day with little or no wait.
