Will The Internet Be Your Financial Adviser?

(NAPSA)—Buying insurance via the Internet may prove costly unless you understand how insurance products work, cautions the Society of Financial Service Professionals.

An insurance policy is a complex contract with many variables to consider.

According to Anthony Domino, Jr., CLU, ChFC, MSFS and president of the Society of FSP, “An insurance policy is a complex contract with many variables to consider. It’s best to enlist the help of a credentialed financial professional who has the wisdom, experience and understanding the Internet lacks. He or she will discuss your financial goals with you and then prepare a sound plan to help you achieve them.

“If that ‘Internet bargain’ leaves your family with inadequate or poorly structured coverage, then it could cost you much more than it saves.”
