Hints For Keeping Your Friends Happy

(NAPSA)—Picking just the right presents for your friends while looking like a blooming genius at gift giving time can be easier than many people realize.

A company that’s been trusted for more than 40 years to deliver smiles has new, truly original gifts available this holiday season, as well as tried-and-true treasures, all designed to surprise and delight.

Consider these bounties:
- Santa’s Surprise: A great gift doesn’t have to take up a great deal of room. Consider The Night Before Christmas Holiday Flower Tree®, for instance: Even if they already have a full on-its-branch baum to gather around, your friends might get a big kick out of this smaller (er) tree, potted in a charming planter that looks like a certain jolly elf’s midsection. It makes a terrific table-topper for the holiday—and it can be planted outdoors once Rudolph and the rest head back north.
- Sweet And Saucy Succulents: If unconventional festivity is more their style, a quartet of mini-succulents in magnetic pots might just be the decor they’re looking for. A variety of succulents—already adorable—is potted with fresh moss in magnet-backed, metallic “ornaments” in red, silver, bronze or gold. Give all four to one friend or give one to each of four different friends.
- If you splurged on something for yourself, consider the tasteful, tasty spending plans, checking your list twice, and perhaps grabbing a gift for yourself while you’re at it.

For many couples, spending limits are the secret to happier holidays.

Happiness And How Couples Spend

(NAPSA)—Quicken, maker of the best-selling personal finance software in the U.S., recently surveyed over 1,000 married adults to get a picture of their spending habits over the holidays—and to find out if spending impacts their relationship happiness.

Do you spend what I spend? The majority of couples (nearly 70 percent) say they agree on holiday spending levels. Some observations about those who set (or didn’t set) spending limits:
- Spending limits and happiness go hand in hand.
- People who discuss and agree on holiday spending report being happier with the amount their spouse spends on them.
- For those who agree on limits, 78 percent are happy with how much their spouse spends. That number drops when couples don’t agree on holiday spending limits, 63 percent of those who don’t set a limit say they’re happy with the amount spent on them.
- People who did not set spending limits are twice as likely to wish their spouse had spent more on them (24 percent) than those who did (10 percent).
- Setting limits is one thing—telling the truth is another.
- Nearly half (47 percent) of the people who said they set a limit have deceived their spouse about how much they spent on gifts.
- The vast majority of those white lies were told by people who spent more than the stated limit on a gift for their love.
- Eighty-one percent said they spent more on their spouse than they agreed to.
- Putting the “no” in merry.
- If you splurged on something for yourself while you were shopping for others, don’t feel bad. Nearly a third (28 percent) of people say they spend more on themselves during the holiday season than they do on their spouse.
- Making a list and checking it twice may not be enough.
