Of Hispanic Heritage

(NAPA)—National Hispanic Heritage Month is an opportunity to acknowledge the history, culture and contributions of the people of Mexico, the Caribbean, Central and South America, and Spain. One of the best ways to celebrate, many say, is with food.

Making that easy is one restaurant chain that’s having a year-round love affair with Latino and Hispanic cuisine. Long known for its authentic Tex-

A great way to commemorate Hispanic Heritage Month is with tasty Latino-influenced dishes.

Mex roots, Church’s Chicken/’Texas Chicken’ has spent years championing the commemorative period—which runs from September 15 to October 15th—on a global stage.

The first Hispanic influence on the company’s menu was the jalapeno pepper—the very first side item ever offered at the restaurant chain. The peppers were added to the menu due to a San Antonio tradition of squeezing their juice over various foods to give them a south-of-the-border style “kick” of heat and spice.

The restaurant’s sister brand, Texas Chicken, features the Mexican Burger on menus worldwide. This tasty chicken burger is a feast of tastes and textures, with a juicy hand-battered chicken breast fillet that’s topped “taco style” with cheese, fresh lettuce, tomato, spicy mayo, crunchy tortilla chips and chopped onions.
