U.S. Government Information Products For Sale Online

(NAPSA)—Whether you're running a business, keeping up with current events, or looking for something interesting to read, you can go online to find the most up-to-date government publications, periodicals, and electronic products available for sale.

With customers across the nation and worldwide the U.S. Government Printing Office's Superintendent of Documents sales program serves people who need the latest in published information from agencies of the U.S. government.

The Superintendent of Documents sales program is the public's easy-access route to:

- consumer resources related to health, nutrition and education;
- authoritative military history and defense analyses;
- copyright, trademark and patent procedures;
- immigration forms and study guides;
- medical research reports;
- economic indicators;
- safety standards;
- guidebooks from the National Park Service;
- training materials for pilots, emergency medical technicians and other professionals;
- federal laws, regulations and guidelines;
- domestic and international demographic, productivity, agriculture and trade statistics;
- select congressional hearing reports, court decisions and much more.

The U.S. Government Printing Office makes publications and periodicals available for sale to both consumers and businesses.

Visitors to the U.S. Government Online Bookstore Web site can find a complete, searchable sales product catalog; announcements of new and newsworthy titles; locations of U.S. government bookstores, and a subscription catalog. Each bookstore carries a selection of the most popular federal government publications and electronic products. Every bookstore can order any of almost 10,000 titles for sale by GPO.

Customers have a number of convenient payment options, including cash (bookstores only), check (bookstore and mail order sales only), credit cards and Superintendent of Documents deposit accounts.
