Help For Home Energy Bills

(NAPSA)—Keeping a home comfortable year round while saving on energy bills may be easier than many people think.

With help from their electric company, the money consumers save can really hold down energy bills.

Electric companies offer consumers energy—and money—saving ideas.

According to Edison Electric Institute, many electric companies offer a variety of low- cost or no-cost energy efficiency programs to help consumers save energy.

These include in-home energy audits, and tips on how to save energy. Some even offer incentives to buy efficient appliances.

Many electric companies are now using the Internet to help make energy saving more interesting, convenient and accessible, such as an interactive online energy audit that consumers can perform from their desktop computer.
