How To Improve An American Classic

(NAPSA)—What could be better than a screen door—a design feature that has long provided homes with a breath of fresh air free from intruding insects?

The answer: a better screen door.

While it is hard to improve on the simplicity of design and functionality—one company has dramatically advanced this American classic.

Screen Tight, the company that reinvented the way the screen is attached to a screened-in porch, has introduced a screen door that looks better and lasts longer than the traditional wood screen door.

The new screen door, made from solid cellular vinyl, offers the classic look and feel of wood with the low maintenance characteristics of solid vinyl.

Each door can be cut and trimmed like wood for proper installation. Best of all, there is no need for painting, and over time, your door will last longer and retain a cleaner finish.

Value-conscious consumers are increasingly turning to products that require less in the way of maintenance and replacement. With a retail price in the range of $50 to $120, the Better Board Screen Door competes favorably with medium-priced wood screen doors that have a shorter life span because of their tendency to warp, rot and come apart.

One company has improved on the screen door's simplicity of design and functionality.

Each Better Board screen door incorporates the famous Screen Tight “spline-in screen” method for easy screen repair or replacement
