Remote PC Control— For Free

(NAPSA)—Here's good news for travelers: Gone are the days when you found yourself without important data because you forgot to transfer a file to your laptop (or forgot your laptop completely).

A new and completely free Web-based service lets you gain full control of your computer from anywhere in the world. All you need is an Internet connection and a browser.

It's now possible to access your files, no matter where you are.

With the LogMeIn service, you can access your Windows-based home or office computer simply by logging in from any Internet-connected device with a Web browser—including desktop and laptop computers, handhelds and even non-Windows computers such as Apple and Linux-based systems. Once connected, you can operate your home or office computer as if you were sitting in front of it.

LogMeIn is free, easy to set up and use, and secure. A paid version—LogMeIn Pro ($12.95 per month)—adds features including peer-to-peer file distribution, file and folder synchronization, automatic remote-to-local printing and telephone support.
