

A Gift For Your Favorite Family

(NAPSA)—Spending family time together can be a relaxing moment in today's fast-paced world.

Studies have shown that it is important for families to spend time together on a regular basis and share as many meals as possible. Eating together is about more than just food. When families eat together, they talk about the things that happened in their day and how they felt. They grow closer and build a stronger bond because they are some of the most important people in your life.

If your family seeks more ways to spend quality time together, consider the following ideas:

•Family fun. Set a night aside that you always spend together. Don't allow any interruptions, even if the night revolves around games and pizza.

•Brunch. If coordinating everyone for dinner is a problem, have breakfast together on the weekend.

•Sweet Treat. Plan a dessert night once a week. Take turns choosing or making the dessert.

•Celebrate. Find family occasions to celebrate together over a special meal out. You don't have to wait for graduations or other special events. Get together for a meal to celebrate life's small victories, such as your child learning to ride a bike.
