Artfully blending historic ambience with modern luxury, the Fairmont Heritage Place homes offer expansive two- and three-bedroom floor plans that range from 1,200 to 1,900 square feet, large living spaces with up to 12-foot ceilings, modern kitchens with Sub-Zero appliances, plasma televisions, in-home fireplaces and exposed brick. The large bedrooms feature spacious closets, plasma screens and patio access with unobstructed views of the Bay, Alcatraz Island and the Marin County headlands.

Additionally, celebrated chef Gary Danko, recipient of numerous awards including the James Beard Foundation's "Best Chef-California," recently announced Ghirardelli Square will become the home of his newest restaurant venture—sure to be a hit with a menu that will be a cross between an American diner and a seafood bar.

A unique and intimate physical space, the square offers a premier location with breathtaking views of the Golden Gate Bridge and a home base from which to enjoy San Francisco and Northern California's many attractions.
