Where Do Teachers Get Their School Supplies?

(NAPSA)—It's always a smart choice to get back-to-school supplies at stores that tie in quality of products with quality of education. That is why a growing number of teachers and parents shop at stores that have a unique product mix they can't find anywhere else.

A great resource to connect parents and teachers to a nearby Parent-Teacher Store is www.TeacherStores.com.

These stores, called Parent-Teacher Stores, stock everything from math tutor software to language development aids. The stores are part of the National School Supply and Equipment Association (NSSEA) and typically stock 10,000 different items especially selected to help children enjoy a whole lifetime of learning.

Many of the store owners and employees are former teachers, current teachers, and parents who know which products work and which will fill a specific need.

Many Parent-Teacher Stores offer in-store workshops. To find one of these stores, simply look for the NSSEA Open for Business decal.

Parents looking for Parent-Teacher Stores and stores looking to become an NSSEA member can visit www.teacherstores.com.
