Hot Holiday Gifts That Don't Break The Bank

(NAPSA)—Good news for holiday shoppers: Not every cool tech item on the wish list has to break the bank. In fact, there are plenty of gifts that come in under $100.

This year, it's about digital music, video games and staying connected. Here are a few items that are a great value but don't skimp on the cool factor:

Crosley 4-In-1 Music System: Across the board, the Crosley systems offer a classic style with classic functionality. Vinyl is coming back in a big way, and this particular system plays those records along with an AM/FM radio, CDs and even...cassette tapes. It also has speakers built right into the unit.

Sony Noise-Canceling Headphones: Just about everyone has an iPod these days, but the earbuds that come with the iPod can become downright uncomfortable. You can upgrade the experience with a pair of overear headphones from Sony. The built-in noise-canceling feature is also great for drowning out chatty passengers on flights as well as snoring spouses.

"Shaun White Snowboarding": Action sports star Shaun White is headlining one of the biggest video games of this year on Xbox 360, PlayStation 3 and Wii. If you are unable to hit the slopes this winter, this game will serve as a realistic substitute. Target has an exclusive version of the game that has a ton of extra features, including an entire Target-exclusive mountain to ride.

Peek Wireless E-mail Device: If you want access to your e-mail on the go without complications or a high price, the new Peek Wireless E-mail Device might be something to consider. It's available exclusively at Target stores and uses T-Mobile's data plan. It's so easy to set up and use, even novice e-mailers can make sure they'll get your wish list.
