

WORLD LEADERS

Students Cited As Future Leaders

(NAPSA)—As the worlds of business and politics change, so do the demands of leadership.

Due to shortages of well-trained leaders who can function effectively in complex, technology-driven environments and in varied cultural settings, new approaches are required to prepare young people for the demands of a changing world.

In an effort to promote the development of future global leaders, The Goldman Sachs Foundation has instituted a program that identifies 100 college students of exceptional promise.

Students applied from 54 institutions in Australia, Brazil, Bulgaria, Czech Republic, France, Germany, Hong Kong, Hungary, Japan, Mexico, Poland, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, the United Kingdom and the United States.

From the applicants, one hundred students were recognized as Goldman Sachs Global Leaders. The top fifty of these students were given the distinction of “top honors” and had the opportunity to participate in the Goldman Sachs Global Leaders Institute.

The program is managed by the same organization that manages the Fulbright program for the U.S. Department of State—the Institute of International Education.

Among the 50 “top honors” winners worldwide, the 10 U.S. “top honors” students are: Lillian Liang Zhao, Providence, RI, Brown University; Jessica Beard, Houston, Texas, Columbia University; Jonathan Pollard, Fayetteville, PA, Cornell University; Syed Atif Ansar, Islamabad, Pakistan, Georgetown University; Lisa Schwartz, East Hills, NY, Harvard University; Vincent Indelicato, Staten Island, NY, Haverford College; Marianna Ofori, Bethesda, MD, Howard University; Fulton Eaglin, Ann Arbor, MI, Morehouse College; David Levin, Dallas, TX, University of Pennsylvania; and Chesa Gilbert Boudin, Chicago, IL, Yale University.

Students from around the world recently attended the Goldman Sachs Global Leaders Institute aimed at developing leaders for the New Economy.

According to Stephanie Bell-Rose, president of The Goldman Sachs Foundation, “The Goldman Sachs Global Leaders Program invests in the preparation of talented students from all disciplines for distinctive service to society and their future professions.”

At the Global Leaders Institute, students participated in challenging seminars and interactive workshops on the New Economy, diplomacy, organizational leadership and international finance. Faculty for the Institute was led by world-renowned professors from the Graduate School of Education and the Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania, senior Goldman Sachs executives and special guest speakers such as former Prime Minister of Poland, Jan Krzysztof Bielecki.

Allan Goodman, president and CEO of the Institute of International Education said, “The Institute has partnered with The Goldman Sachs Foundation on this initiative as we both believe that the outstanding students of today will be the leaders of tomorrow.”

Each of the 100 students selected as Global Leaders received an award of $2,000. Besides attending the Global Leaders Institute, the 50 “top honors” students received an additional $3,000 and a laptop computer.

To learn more, visit the site at www.iie.org/pgms/global_leaders.