

Trick-or-Treaters Show Spirit of Giving

(NAPSA)—Knock, knock, knock. Each Halloween, children across America dress up as witches, ghosts and goblins, and knock on neighborhood doors for candy. This year, kids will also be in search of jingling pockets full of coins as they “Trick-or-Treat for UNICEF.”

Look for trick-or-treaters with orange UNICEF cartons or visit Coinstar coin-counting machines at the supermarket to make a donation.

Parents, children and their communities can help the U.S. Fund for UNICEF by filling up orange UNICEF boxes or donating change through a Coinstar machine while on a trip to the supermarket.

Coinstar, the world's leading coin-counting company, helps UNICEF's fundraising program by adding a donations feature to its supermarket-based machines. This feature makes it easy to give a direct contribution to the U.S. Fund for UNICEF. Folks can simply pour their loose change into the machine, which automatically counts the coins and prints out a tax-deductible receipt.

Instead of waiting for trick-or-treaters to come knocking, Americans are urged to visit one of nearly 10,000 self-service coin-counting machines found throughout the country. The U.S. Fund for UNICEF works for the survival and protection of children in underdeveloped countries through education, advocacy and fundraising. Funds collected through Coinstar this Halloween will help UNICEF immunize children against polio worldwide.
