

Health Bulletin

Coping With The Cost Of Care

(NAPSA)—A new program may help people with cancer better manage their personal and financial health.

A recent study by Kaiser Family Foundation and American Cancer Society found that high cost sharing, caps on benefits and lifetime maximums leave cancer patients vulnerable to high out-of-

FRANKLY
SPEAKING ABOUT CANCER

Coping with the Cost of Care

People with cancer who actively participate in their recovery along with their healthcare team will improve the quality of their lives and may enhance the possibility of their recovery. People with cancer who actively participate in their recovery along with their healthcare team improve the quality of their lives and may enhance the wellness community

A program could help patients control the cost of cancer care.

pocket health care costs. Additionally, cancer patients and survivors often cannot find adequate and affordable health coverage.

The program, called Frankly Speaking About Cancer: Coping with the Cost of Care, aims to streamline crucial resources available to people in treatment for cancer. Created by The Wellness Community, it includes a workshop and book that provide a practical guide to navigating the complex challenges of managing the cost of cancer care.

The program sheds light on the psychosocial impact of incurring debt, sometimes for the first time, in combination with the psychological impact of coping with a cancer diagnosis. To find a workshop or to order a free copy, visit www.thewellnesscommunity.org or call (888) 793-WELL.